Chicago Defeated New York 4 to 2
This Afternoon, Ending
Race.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

New York, Oct. 8.—Before a crowd estimated at thirty-five thousand the Giants and Cubs this afternoon battled for the championship of the National league.

At one o'clock the gates to the grounds were locked and no one was admitted, every seat being filled.

It was 2:55 when Umpire Johnston and Klem, who officiated, called the game.

Pfeister and Kling started in for the Chicago team, but Pfeister gave way to Brown early in the first inning. Mathewson and Reesehan are on the heels for the Giants.

The score by innings was as follows:

First Inning—Chicago, 0; New York, 1.

Second Inning.—In the second inning Chicago made a single, but was caught napping off first. He protested so hard that he was threatened with being put out of the game. Hoffman was also benched and put off this field.

Unveiled Today in Palestine, Texas.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Palestine, TEXAS, OCT. 8.—An over-lauding memorial of John H. Reagan, the "grand old man" of Texas, was unveiled here today in the presence of a large crowd. The ceremonies were conducted under the auspices of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and were of an interesting character. The oration of the day was delivered by Congressman Jack Heall of Waxahatchie.

The monument is the work of Pompeo Coppitt, the San Antonio sculptor. Standing upon a base of Texas granite nine feet high, the bronze figure of the grand old man is seen to rise from his seat in the United States senate. The pose is erect and fearless, with hand extended in the gesture of command. At his feet sits the allegorical figure of a defeated soldier. This, also the work of Coppitt, is symbolical of the conquered South and is called "The Lost Cause."

In the front face of the granite base the name of Judge Reagan is given, and on the other three faces are tablets, two bearing quotations, and one an escutcheon giving the life record of Senator Reagan.

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 8.—This was "Children's and Naval Day" on the calendar of Philadelphia's anniversary celebration, and it proved to be one of the most successful and attractive features of the week's program. The school children of the city turned out in full force for special exercises in Independence Hall, followed by a big parade through the downtown streets.

The day's naval display consisted of a review of a score of United States and foreign warships in the Delaware and a great river pageant in which several hundred vessels of all descriptions took part.

The third annual meeting of the Fort Worth Fair-Association began today with a record-breaking first day attendance. The management this year has worked hard to secure attractions of the very best class and from all indications their efforts were successful.

The exhibition is far more elaborate than in past years. In every department the displays are large and unusually attractive. The show of livestock, horses, swine and poultry is especially notable, and the displays in the agricultural and horticultural departments embrace every grown on farm, orchard and garden.

The fair will continue eight days, closing on October 18. The racing program was inaugurated this afternoon and will continue daily, Sunday excepted, until the closing day of the exhibition.

Monroe, Wis., Oct. 8.—The city bond issue ordinance for $24,000 has been found to be invalid and another ordinance will have to be passed if the city wishes to raise the money needed for improvements. A Chicago bonding company pointed out the flaw in the ordinance and the city council has already introduced another ordinance. The state constitution provides that municipal bonds shall be taken up in not more than ten years nor more than twenty years after date of issue. The ordinance provided for the issuance of the bonds to-day and the last bond was to be paid on Jan. 1, 1929, which would be two and a half months after twenty years. The new ordinance will specify for the payment of the last two bonds, amounting to $2,000.

Presiding Judge Of Highest Tribunal In The Land Enters Upon 21st Year Of Service.

[SPECIAL TO THE HERALD.]

Washington, D. C., Oct. 8.—When Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller appeared in the United States Supreme court today he found upon his desk a beautiful bouquet of twenty bright red roses. The bouquet came from the associate justices of the Supreme Court and was a reminder to the Chief Justice that today he had rounded out an honorable service of 26 years as presiding judge of the highest tribunal in the land.

Of late there has been considerable discussion in Washington over the possibility of a change in the near future in the chief justiceship. Chief Fuller is seventy-five years old and has been eligible to retirement on full pay since his seventieth birthday. He enjoys excellent health and appears to be good for many a long year on the bench still, but after the honorable record and the long tenure which he has already enjoyed it is not to be supposed that he will desire to continue indefinitely.

Justice Fuller is an ardent democrat and naturally would like to see a democrat appointed his successor. If Mr. Bryan should be elected to the presidency there is but the slightest doubt but that Justice Fuller would retire, which would give Mr. Bryan a chance to appoint a democrat in his place. As a matter of fact, it is generally believed he will retire anyway because he is reaching an age when he is entitled to reap the fruits of an honorable life in peace and quiet and without the disturbing burden of important public office. In any event it is scarcely probable that Chief Justice Fuller will remain on the bench until the end of the next administration since at that time he will have reached 80 years of age.

Had the Chief Justice seen fit to retire during the administration of President Roosevelt it is believed the latter would have appointed Elihu Root as his successor on the supreme bench. And it is believed that should Judge Taft succeed to the Presidency he would in all probability carry out the Roosevelt idea of appointing Secretary of State, since Taft, and Root are as firm friends as are Root and Roosevelt. In the event of the election of Mr. Bryan the succession would become entirely a matter of speculation.

It is no ordinary honor to be able to name a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court because it is an opportunity which has come to but few presidents of the United States. There have been but eight Chief Justices of the Supreme Court since the days of the venerable John Jay of New York, Justice Jay served from 1789 to 1795, six years; John Rutledge of South Carolina served during 1795, Oliver Ellsworth of Connecticut the five years from 1796 to 1801; John Marshall of Virginia served thirty-four years, from 1801 to 1835; Roger B. Taney of Maryland served from 1836 to 1864, twenty-eight years; Salmon P. Chase of Ohio served from 1864 to 1873, and Morrison R. Waite of the same state, from 1873 to 1888, when Chief Justice Fuller was appointed.

Chief Justice Fuller is a native of Maine and graduated Bowdoin College, in 1852, where he practiced law until appointed to the supreme bench. In 1862 he was a member of the state constitutional convention in Illinois. From 1863 to 1865 he was a member of the state legislature. He was a delegate to the democratic national conventions in 1864, 1872, 1876 and 1880. The degree of LL. D. has been conferred upon him by Northwestern University, by Bowdoin College, by Harvard, by Yale and by Dartmouth, Chicago, Oct. 8.—The second session of the lakes to the gulf deep waterways association was attended today by an great and enthusiastic audience as that which listened to Taft on the opening day. Bryan was the magnet of the second session. His appearance on the platform and introduction by David R. Francis of St. Louis was the signal for great applause. The convention adjourned early to permit delegates to participate in the automobile parade in which a thousand machines were in line. Taft left early today for Cincinnati. Bryan addresses the Evanston students at Northwestern university this afternoon. A letter from James J. Hill was read by Congressman Rodney. Hill declared the waterway is assured, not so much as competitor but as a helper of the railroad.

Training for the cross-country team will begin about the first of next month and will continue through the winter. It is planned to have a cross-country race Thanksgiving day with a trophy as the first prize.

During the winter season there will be held a contest every month to determine the best all-round man in the gymnasium work. Points will be given in each event and the man winning the largest number of points will be given a medal which he may keep until the next month, when another contest will be held.

MUCH INTEREST IN PROJECT TO IMPROVE RIVER

DIXON GATHERING HAS BEEN THE INITIAL STEP IN THE WORK.

Janesville Delegates at Meeting Delighted Over the Chances for Making Rock River Navigable.

That the meeting held in Dixon, when the Rock River Improvement Association was formally organized, will be of vital importance to Janesville and Janesville business interests, is apparent to the delegates from this city who attended the gathering. The making of the Rock river a navigable stream means a decrease in freight rates, a delivery of coal and other products at less than a sixth of the present cost and at the same time adding rather than subtracting the factories and water-power corporations along its banks.

At the Tuesday meeting Captain Wheeler, engineer in charge of the government work at the Hennepin canal, and Honorable Lyman C. Cooley of Chicago, consulting engineer for the drainage canal, both gave enthusiastic talks on the prospects for the Rock river.

Both gentlemen gave interesting facts on inland waterway with figures and statistics to show the need for the conservation of water supply and the great advantages which would be derived commercially from their improvement. A ride of five miles up Rock river, which is particularly beautiful at this point, was enjoyed. At 8 o'clock a banquet was tendered by the citizens' association of Dixon and was participated in by about 150 people. Congressman Frank O. Lowden, who has taken a keen interest in Rock river improvement, gave a talk in which he promised aid to the project.

He said among other things that the time had come when the government would appropriate money to improve an inland waterway to please some politician. It must be shown that the waterway was needed and also that the people themselves will fund their support and aid in every way the improvement. He thought Rock river presented the best opportunity for permanent improvement of any stream. In the 80's the government investigation of the project, he understood, seemed feasible.

The lake reservoirs at the head waters of the river can be improved, so that a constant flowage of water will be obtained through the year. Every city and town on the river should cooperate with the government engineers and officials in their efforts and work in connection with this project. No other nation would allow a river like the Rock to remain unimproved. It would be used for commercial purposes. The improvement would be the means of reclaiming some 10,000 acres of valuable lands along the river which are now useless at high water seasons. The manufacturing interests of every city and town on the river would be enhanced materially.

Mayor C. S. Hebe, government engineer in charge of waterways in Mississippi valley, addressed the assembly. His speech is given here in full:

"Mr. Townsman, Gentlemen:

"The value of waterways as means of transportation lies in two facts: First, that, disregarding the handling at terminals, freight can be carried by water for from 1-3 to 1-5 of what it will cost to carry it by rail. It is the cheapest method of transportation known. What could be cheaper than the floating of logs down the Mississippi?—the floating of coal barges down the Ohio?—or the transportation of iron ore on the Great Lakes?"

"The second factor in the value of waterways lies in the capability of their use by the individual. A railway must have its general manager, its train dispatcher, its standard equipment, its operation must always be under the control of some central authority. A waterway is as free to the shantyboat of the humble fisherman as it is to the commercial freight carrier or to the floating palace of the millionaire. A railway must be a monopoly—a waterway is free to all.

"If a waterway possesses such important advantages over a railway, the question naturally arises as to why the existing waterways of the country are not used for transportation to a very much greater degree. There are a number of reasons for this:

"In the first place there is at present a lack of suitable terminal facilities for our inland waterways. Our industries have grown up for the most part with their faces to the railways and their backs to the waterways. Every industry of any consequence has its own switch for convenient shipment by rail. To ship by water would involve considerable handling by team to and from the waterway. This difficulty can be met by locating the industries closer to the water, as is now being very largely done in the Pittsburgh district.

"In the second place sufficient facilities for transshipment between rail and water are not yet provided.

"In the third place, the former system of rebating made in favor of rail shipments. A producer did not so much care what the actual freight charges were, as the consumer really paid them, but the producer was vitally interested in securing a better freight rate than his competitors. This, under the rebate system, might be gotten from the railway, but not from a waterway. Those who secured special advantages of this character naturally shipped by rail. Those who did not secure such advantages but who hoped to also did the same. This system has now been done away with, and the only hope a producer now has for better freight rates than his competitors lies in his ability and their inability to ship by water.

"But the greatest reason for the inadequate use of our waterways in the past seems to me to lie in the fact that they do not form a connected system.

"Take a map of the United States, wipe out all the railways that now exist, and substitute for them a series of detached railways where we now have navigable water. That and no more. How much business could be done if our transportation facilities were confined to that?"

"You could ship from St. Paul to St. Louis, to New Orleans, to Pittsburg, but you could not ship from St. Paul to Duluth, nor to Chicago, nor to New York.

"You could ship from Kansas City to New Orleans, but not to Chicago, nor to Boston, nor Buffalo.

"The railways began to link themselves into a connected system back in the 1850's. A standard gauge was adopted, and it became possible to ship a car from any point to any other point. From that time onward the commerce of our inland waterways began to decline.

"What is needed, therefore, is the creation of an inland waterway system, connecting the lakes with the Mississippi, and, by a sheltered coast, with the Gulf. This essential part done, the system could be extended until—like France and Germany, we would have no city of any consequence without its waterway.

"Then we would be able to support as dense a population as those countries, for they would come to have the advantage of us in freight charges and we could meet their competition in the world's markets.

"The coarse freight that now blocks our railways during periods of excessive production could be carried by water at far less cost, leaving the railways free to carry fast freight, express, and passengers, from which, by reason of the greater density of population that would follow, they would obtain sufficient profit.

"Unless the railways be so supplemented, they will soon fall under the strain that will be put upon them, and the progress of the country will be impeded.

"You are interested in this matter, because the Hennepin canal, which is the first overland canal that the United States government has built, puts you not only on Rock river, but on the Mississippi and Illinois rivers as well. The waterway from Chicago to the Illinois interests you because it will enable you to ship by water to lake ports and to a number of points with which you can do business by water.

"While you are vitally interested in this general plan, you are naturally more immediately concerned with the improvement of Rock river itself."

"Here your first effort should be to extend the limits of the Hennepin Canal navigation to the cities of Sterling, Rock Falls and Dixon.

"To the two former, this can be done by the construction of a lock in the recently completed Government dam. This lock with its approaches will cost $55,000. The work has been recommended to Congress and is in shape to be acted upon.

"To extend navigation to Dixon will require considerable dredging. A channel 300 feet wide and 7 feet deep should be provided, and its cost is estimated at $100,000, though a less satisfactory channel could be made for less money.

"This estimate has been presented by the department to the river and harbor committee of Congress, but in an informal way. Still I believe an appropriation for the work could be gotten if you were to make the necessary effort.

"But you must not expect the government to appropriate for this work unless you show that you will fully co-operate.

"If you want navigation, you should provide local facilities for it. From 500 to 1,000 feet of river frontage in each of the three cities should be set aside as a public levee, free for all, and any attempt to monopolize the river front should be prevented.

"You in Rock River valley are not only interested in navigating the river, but as much—if not more—in its use for power.

"The two interests do not conflict. There is no physical reason why the river could not be used to the fullest extent both for navigating and power. There are possibilities for water storage in Rock River and its tributaries that would be of very great benefit to all water powers and that would greatly assist navigation.

"By a judicious use of the lakes in Rock River valley as storage reservoirs, extreme floods could be practically prevented, and the low water flow of the stream could be double and perhaps tripled.

"This would greatly enhance the value of all water powers and would benefit navigation not only in Rock River, but in the Mississippi river below.

"My reason of this benefit to na-tionation it might be possible for you to obtain such legislation from Congress as would permit you to use the 'right of eminent domain' for work of this character, so that it would not unnecessarily delayed the obstructed."

"As the demands on Congress will be very great for work of this kind all over the country, I believe you would get results much quicker and more satisfactorily by not asking too much of the government and by demonstrating that you were willing to do a great deal yourselves.

"As a policy that I believe would the quickest secure results satisfactory to all concerned, I would suggest that the water power owners by concerted action provide all storage reservoirs, dams and flowage basins at their own cost, in as far as it would pay them to do, obtaining from the government, if possible, the right of eminent domain to facilitate the work and avoid excessive charges.

"In addition, at each dam a suitable site for a lock should be donated to the government free of cost.

"Were this to be done, I believe it would be easy for you to induce the government to build the locks and do the dredging necessary to make the river continuously navigable.

"The water power interests would thus secure the fullest development that would pay, and would retain control of the flowage of the river, subject only to such regulation as would be essential for navigation and which ought not in any way to hamper them.

"The government would remain in its proper sphere, and would concern itself with navigation alone.

"With such co-operation as this I believe you would get results quicker than in any other way. You would make no requests of the government that were not within reason, and could make such a strong showing in favor of the work as to render its being undertaken by the government extremely probable.

"You gentlemen of the Rock River Improvement Association have an opportunity to solve a problem that will lead to a great development of all this part of the middle west. To work out a plan that will leave the water powers in private hands, that will greatly improve those water powers, and at the same time will enable the government at small cost greatly to extend its inland waterway system, is an interesting and valuable task.

"No river in the country is more favorable for such complete development than Rock river, and in your efforts along this line you have my full sympathy and best wishes."

WILL PLAY BELOIT ON NEXT SATURDAY

High School Team to Meet Beloit Academy for Second Game of the Season.

The local high school eleven plays its second game of the season Saturday, Oct. 10, with the team from Beloit academy. The game will begin at 3:30 p. m. and will take place in the city at the Athletic park.

The practice this week has not been encouraging. Monday two teams were out and a lively scrimmage was held. The boys seemed to realize, after their defeat at the hands of Lake Mills, that hard work alone was needed to improve them, and all exhibited spirit. Tuesday the practice was called off on account of the rain, and Wednesday only eight of the regulars turned out. Unless the school takes greater interest in the team's affairs and the boys are influenced to turn out regularly and do their part in making the team successful a poor season is to be expected. If indeed the team is not disbanded. However, it seems that the boys will not give up in that hollow fashion, but will turn to and put forward their best and strongest efforts, and utterly wipe out the stain of last week's defeat.

The same plan of selling hat or coat checks on the field will be followed in this and in all future games of the season.

TWILIGHT CLUB TO MEET OCTOBER 13

First Meeting Will be Held on Tuesday Evening, October 13th, at 8:15.

On Thursday evening, October 13th, the first meeting of the Twilight Club for the season of 1908-9 will be held at the Y. M. C. A. building. The topic for discussion will be the Government Guaranty of Bank Deposits and Mr. Fred L. Clemens will be the leader. As yet the entire program of speakers has not been arranged, but will be in a day or so.

On the question of increasing the fees of the club which was submitted to the members some time ago, the majority were in favor of no increase so there will be no change in that direction this year.

On the question of engaging some speaker to come and take up a whole evening and whose expenses should be paid, the club voted to continue as heretofore and have the speakers chosen from among the members. As formerly there will be prominent men from away to address the club, as on Science Night for instance, but the programs will be the same this year as in the past as to the speakers.

Sweet-Smelling Herbs.

The nice old custom of putting lavender and other scented herbs in linen presses and other places containing clothing is not so much practiced now as it was a generation ago, or even a few years ago.

Have you any conception of how old the custom is? Turn to the twenty-seventh chapter of Genesis, in the Bible, and you will read that Jacob, when old and blind, "smelled the smell" of Jacob's ramment, which he compared to the "smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed." It is evident that Rebecca had put sweet-smelling herbs where her favorite son's clothing was kept.

The Eternal Feminine.

"I'll tell you how I'm saving money so that I can entertain friends at dinner, Marie," said a stenographer to her chum as they soared upward in an office elevator. "Whenever I am invited to dine out and do not have to pay for my own dinner, I put the amount I save in my little iron bank. However," she continued, with the particularly pleasant purr that sometimes precedes a scratch, "that plan won't do you any good, will it, dear, for you are never invited out, are you?"

Self-Knowledge.

The last of a long line of recurring plagues stood at the pumpless well of a suburban residence.

"This well has been badly tinkered with," he announced, as others had done before him. "But the pumping apparatus seems to be gone. Is there a sucker anywhere about the place?"

"O, yes," replied the chastened owner, "here I am."

RUBBERING IT IN.

Harold: Yes, but you, I loved Martin all over the river while peeping the question and then she turned me down. Howard: Turned you down, old? Did it give you the heartache? Harold: No, dear boy it—no—gave me the backache! I had been tawling four hours!

SEPTEMBER SOMNOLUS.

The festive center now awakes, Likewise the restless wing; But one who lives on selfish cakes—What are these things to him?

LEFT BEHIND.

Oh, sweet, faded, creation days In streaming sun; Fond memory brings back everything Except the trunk.

IN SECTIONS.

The Plasterers' Union had not engaged a speaker for the occasion, but when the grounds were reached there was general feeling that someone ought to say something. In this emergency the secretary volunteered to fill the breach, and, arising, he said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: The laborer is worthy of his hire."

With that he sat down, but there were so many calls for him to go on that he arose again and added:

"And the boss' watch is always five minutes too fast when we begin and five minutes too slow when we quit."

There was increased enthusiasm, and though the speaker would have got out of it if he could, he was obliged to continue:

"And if we didn't put on the plaster where would the world be?"

He meant this for his concluding effort, having, as he knew, made the speech of the day, but after five minutes of telling the crowd to get up to brush off with.

"And it takes hair and time and mud and a dog to make plaster, and if we don't do for our rights how are we ever to live to get them?"

And then he was through for good, and it was unanimously

WHY HE WENT HOME.

Landlord—You look kinder blue today, Mister.

City Boarder—Yes, I'm just dying for some red liver made to make me up.

Landlord—What, will you soon fix that? Can't you in the parlor? I'll be here to play "Home, Sweet Home" on the organ for ye.

MARRIAGE ON COTTON BALE.

Plantation Hands Raised It and Used It as Altar For Double Wedding.

When Robert Robinson fell in love with Tebbie Bell the two of them were picking cotton near Summerfield, a little country town not far from Selma, Ala., says a special dispatch to the New York Times. Robert's close friend was Perry Braxton, and Perry's eyes looked with fondness on the charcoal complexioned Florence Norris. The friends fell deeply in love at the same time, but cotton picking was not doing very much financially by them, and they looked about for a means of gaining their plantation sweethearts and paying the preacher.

The two went in on a proposition of raising just enough cotton of their own to provide them a start in married life, and in off times they worked sundry bare strips of land and eared for their little patches of the plant.

The first bale of cotton the field hand lovers picked from their own plants was ready to bring to market the other day, and Robert and Perry, grinning from ear to ear, followed by Tebbie and Florence, blushing furiously, but inevitably, arrived in Selma.

I. Yaretsky, a cotton factor in Water street, bought their big bale and offered them the money. The two negro couples lingered in the cotton factor's office until Yaretsky's curiosity was aroused, and he asked them what was the matter.

"Hym'n's de Bible, m'stuh," said Robert at last, "an' hyar's de ring fo' Tebbie's finger."

"An' hyar's de ring fo' Florence's finger, m'stuh," added Perry.

Yaretsky called up a minister on the telephone, and in a few minutes this double romance of the cotton fields was being rounded off. The four had waited eagerly for the production and sale of that bale of cotton, and it had some sentimental value to them. So they stood on the bale as the wedding ceremony was performed, the minister standing on a chair.

"Is ye gwine bounth an' obey all niggah, Tebbie?" asked the minister, peering through his silver rimmed octagonal spectacles.

"Suttinly. Ahn't he muh un-a-an?" retorted Tebbie.

"All right," announced the parson. "Tek him, an' see dat he traits ye right, gal."

"Miss Norris," began the parson, turning to the other bride, "ye loves dis gentleman?"

"Yassie," whispered Florence.

"Den let not man absouder what Gaved Almighty has jined on dis cotton bale."

Selma never before had a bale of cotton used for an altar or a wedding as interesting.

MINE EXPLOSION TESTS.

Government Plans Experiments So as to Minimize Danger.

A miniature coal mine in which explosions will take place for the purpose of observing what causes mine horrors and the best methods of preventing them and of extending relief when they do happen is to be established in Pittsburgh by the technologic branch of the United States geological survey. A site for the plant or "school" is now being selected by J. A. Holmes, chief of the technologic branch, says the New York Tribune.

The most important part of the miniature mine will be a cylinder 100 feet long and six feet in diameter, made of armor plate, in which the experiments with explosives will be conducted. The cylinder will be filled with the various things which cause mine explosions—fire damp and air, coal dust and air, black damp and air, gases of various kinds, etc. Into these combinations a mortar will hurl the various things which cause the explosions, such as dynamite, powder, naked lamps, etc.

On the top of the cylinder there will be a large number of safety valves, which will be left open, so that the explosions shall not wreck the cylinder, the valves carrying away the greater part of the force of the explosion. An observation house will be located sixty feet from the cylinder, and from that point those making the explosions can witness the results.

The miniature mine proper will be fitted up exactly as a coal mine, with the various leads and workings. Experiments will be made in the mine with the various gases, with a view to ascertaining how long the miners can live in them and the best means of sustaining life if they are caught. Experiments will also be made with various kinds of headress, such as are worn by miners in many parts of Europe, which rescue parties shall wear when they go into mines known to be filled with deadly fumes.

Action on this plan was hastened because of the reference to mine disasters made by President Roosevelt in his message and by the two recent mine horrors, which blotted out more than 400 lives. Mr. Holmes has made a list of the mine horrors of West Virginia alone for 1900 and 1907. He finds that in that time 637 miners lost their lives.

Boy Who Hears Without Ears.

John Hietzel, a ten-year-old boy sent from Jersey City to the New Jersey State Home For Deaf Mutes at Trenton, N. J., has astonished the physicians who have examined him, says a Trenton special dispatch to the New York Times. The boy has no ears, only lobes about the size of gold dollars, with no openings. But he hears what is said to him and understands. The boy keeps his mouth open, and it is thought that he hears through it, but this has not been determined. Anyway, the little fellow hears as well as other people. He is also learning to speak fairly well.

For Saturday,
October 10th

Something extra special in cotton blankets. 250 pairs of heavy cotton blankets, large size, 11-4, in white, gray and tan colors. The names of these blankets are Glenora and Trojan. They have beautiful borders, blue, pink or red. We call your attention to the superior finish of these blankets, which is obtained by a new German process. Not a particle of waste cotton is used in the manufacture of these blankets. It is called the German finish which is very soft and does not rough up. They are sold in many parts of the country at $1.25 per pair. We could not buy them today, as the mill is all sold up. For Saturday special we put them on sale at 95c

In addition to this special, we wish to call your attention to our line of Cotton Blankets generally, comprising the greatest cotton blankets for the money we have ever offered. We start the fall trade with the largest stock we have ever shown. We have sifted out from our lines every blanket that we do not consider a good value and the numbers we offer we feel safe in saying cannot be matched elsewhere. It will pay you to see our Algiers 11-4 blanket, white with blue and pink borders, at 75c a pair.

Our Trophy 11-4 blanket in gray with blue and pink borders, also our Glysey 11-4 gray blanket, both at $1.25.

Our Yantic 11-4 blanket in gray with blue and pink borders and our No. 2126 11-4 blanket in gray and tan, both at $1.50.

At $2.00 the blankets we offer are remarkable. The one we emphasize is our Australian Blanket. A blanket so good that small dealers in some parts of the country get $2.75 for. Large size 12-4, in white only. These blankets are made of what is called strict good middling cotton. Contains no waste, lint or other inferior fibre and finished by the German process. Weighs nearly six pounds.

Other $2.00 blankets, size 11-4, which we consider extra good are the Cordova, superior wool finish, heavy twilled, silk bound, in gray and tan with blue and pink borders, and our Victorian 11-4 Scotch plaids, twilled in German finish.

Another $2.00 blanket is our Ni-on-to-wool, size 60x80 inches, in white, tan, and gray, with blue and pink borders, look like wool, feel like wool and are hard to tell from wool. They are extra heavy, German finish, but soft and downy, wash nicely and do not rough up. This blanket is also made in a size 72x84 inches which we have marked special at $2.50 per pair.

You will notice today we are simply mentioning our cotton blankets and will leave our wools until a later date, although we have everything one could wish for.

Call Saturday and buy all you need of the 95c blankets.

speaker and the fact that his attitude on the political issues of the day has been questioned, will make his appearance into the political field supporting Judge Taft all the stronger. It is to be hoped that in his address Senator La Follette will remember only the national issues and let the state matters take care of themselves for later solution. It would strengthen his position materially if he did and weaken it if he took up the state fight in connection with his support of the national ticket.

BALKAN WAR CLOUD

Bulgaria's declaration of independence, the annexation of Turkish provinces by Austria-Hungary and the revolt of the island of Crete have all robbed Turkey and the "Sick Man of the East" of valuable territory. The famous treaty of Berlin, signed by the Powers and Turkey in 1878, has been broken and the political map of Europe shattered.

What will be the outcome? Will a bitter and savage war that will further alter Kingdoms and Empires follow, or will a peaceful solution of the question result?

Turkey has asked the Powers to meet and confer on the question. England has formally protested to Austria against seizure of the two provinces and Serbia is in arms demanding war. France is ready to act as mediator and Russia backs up Turkey. Germany is behind Austria and the aged Emperor of the dual Kingdom stands on his dignity and his declaration.

The peace of the world is threatened and all because one Principality desires more freedom, two provinces want to be annexed to a strong Christian nation and an island that for centuries has been subject to Moslem or Christian rule desires political and absolute freedom.

The War Cloud of the Balkans has long been a source of annoyance to the world powers. On the extreme eastern edge of Europe the Balkan states have for ages been a fighting, quarrelsome nest of malevolence, whose frequent outbreaks in the past have been a prolific source of trouble to the adjoining nations.

The question is not: will Turkey permit the loss of territory without a struggle? but, will the other nations permit it and allow their sister empires to add to their territory and strengthen their position?

The civilized world waits with interest the developments and while the United States is not interested materially, indirectly it affects us and the outcome is of vital importance.

CANNED TONGUE

One of the features of the present campaign is the species of "canned tongue" which is dealt out by the national committees in the shape of phonograph records with speeches of the leaders recorded so that the faithful may enjoy them. In Deloit recently a sample of the "tongue" happened to be a racketeering waltz and the faithful who had come to hear Bryan's pearls of wisdom enjoyed music instead.

History tells us that one man, "Peeping Tom," looked when the Lady Godiva rode through the streets of Coventry on a beautiful white horse clothed only in her luxuriant hair. Today exposures, which verge on the indecent, find many "Peeping Toms." The Lady Godiva made her famous ride that the people of Coventry might have certain privileges denied them by their over lord. Today the exposures are made for advertising purposes.

There is no reason why Rock county should not send four good men to the legislature at Madison next winter. Four true blue republicans with Whitehead as state senator—Whitton from the first district, Fisher from the second and Smith from the third. Talk of defeat of one or more of these candidates is foolishness and should be stamped out. True republicans will do their duty on election day and vote for the republican candidates.

The talk of a fair to be held in Janesville next year and for many years following is worth the careful consideration of every businessman in Janesville and the farmers of Rock county. Papers are now being circulated calling for stock subscriptions and they should be signed readily by all interested in promoting the welfare and prosperity of Rock county.

Sheriff Knehl of Milwaukee was correct when at the meeting of the state sheriff's association he advocated a repeal of the state law which forbids a sheriff to be a candidate to succeed himself. It takes two years for a sheriff to become accustomed to the duties of his office and when he is valuable his term is over. It is a question worth considering.

Searching for sunken treasures off the coast of Jamaica nearly cost four Harvard students their lives and the loss of the famous Mayflower that was at one time the American Cup defender.

Notes among college students all over the country are reported, especially at Madison where the Townies and College chaps slashed each other with knives.

Hearst and his papers made a great to-do about Georgia and the prospects of defeating the democratic ticket there with the Independence Party candidate until the votes were counted and then they kept quiet.

No butcher who sells good meat should be afraid of a law which would require an inspection of the beef they sell. It would be for their own protection.

Some of the loudest shouters for reforms now find these reforms imprudent when they affect their own personal interests.

The problem of transforming the Rock river into a navigable stream has been commenced at the meeting at Dixon and promises to bear fruit.

Heart to Heart Talk.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

Copyright, 1908, by Edwin A. Nye.

CAPTAIN GRIDLEY'S MOTHER.

"You may find when ready, Gridley!" The income command of Admiral Dewey to Captain Gridley of the flagship Olympia in Manila harbor will long live in the annals of the American navy, rich as it is in historic utterance.

Gridley gave the word to the gun crews that sank the Spanish flagship and made junk of the fleet of Spain. A month afterward the brave Gridley paid the forfeit of that day's work with his life.

Every schoolboy knows about Gridley and the one sided battle of Manila Bay.

Few of us have known about the mother of the Olympia's commander—no less an American heroine than was her son a hero.

At the age of eighty-three Mrs. Anna Gridley serves her government, earning her bread by putting the red seal on all official letters that go out of her department. Some days she will affix as many as 100 seals.

Here has been a career mingled with sorrow and heroism.

Fifty years ago she lived in a Michigan town. Her eldest son—the future captain—wanted to go to Annapolis. The mother was loath to see him go. With her it was the terrible struggle "twixt love and duty." She was patriotic and loved her boy to the country. Three years after the civil war broke out.

The call came for army nurses. At home Mrs. Gridley had an invalid husband and two small children. Again came the struggle between love and duty. She went to the front as a nurse.

While she was in the field an epidemic took away her husband and two children, leaving to her only the son.

Again the clouds of war broke. The battle of Manila was fought. There was no prouder woman than Mrs. Gridley. A few weeks later her only son was buried with honors.

And now the old mother recalls that, though her boy was ill that fateful day of the battle, he stuck to his post. And so she sticks no less bravely to her task, having nothing now but her memories and her daily task.

In Europe the mother of such a noted captain would be given a pension for life.

Gridley's mother asks no pension. She asks only the chance to work for the government to which she has given her all—a chance to work at eighty-three.

The formula seldom fails: Behind the man-look for the mother.

Bryan and Taft sat down at the same table in Chicago last evening and neither of them talked politics.

The Rock county beet crop is soon to be ground into money for the farmers and sugar for the company.

FASTING AS A RELIGIOUS RITE.

Ceremonial Observed by the Japanese Twice a Year.

From time out of mind, says the Japan Times, certain devotees of that country have visited a celebrated temple at Narita twice a year to perform the pious act of fasting within its sacred precincts. A "fasting hall" has been specially erected for their accommodation and the number entering this hall is on the increase. Those who have already fasted in the fasting chamber this year number 226 men and 32 women. Of the whole number 59 fasted less than a week, 174 fasted one week, ten continued fasting two weeks, 14 fasted three weeks and one went without food for five weeks.

Inquiry as to the motives of the fasters showed that 169 men and 25 women desired to rise in the world, 13 men and two women wanted to increase their business profits, 16 men prayed for the safety of their families, 13 men and four women sought cures of diseases and ten men wanted general good luck.

Only three persons, two men and one woman, fasted in gratitude for the fulfillment of former prayers. "It need scarcely be said," remarks the Japan Times, "that the period of their fasting was the shortest."

Ask Your Neighbor or Friend if the Statements in Regard to Golden Blend Are True

Possibly you are skeptical as to the good qualities of Golden Blend Coffee. I know that many people have made claims as strong as possible for the article they wish to sell through advertising and that the public have been fooled many times and have looked at the statements made in advertisements with distrust. Yet an advertiser should know that he cannot fool the people more than once, and I know that if I depended upon my advertising to bring me customers once and I could not satisfy them so that they would call again and again, it would be too expensive. On the other hand, if this advertisement will induce you to try Golden Blend, I expect to satisfy you for years and possibly you will tell others who will also try Golden Blend and continue to use it as you do.

I make these statements about Golden Blend: It is a standard of what good coffee should be; being a standard it suits nine-tenths of all the people. Those who have tried it continue to use it. Every fourth lady you meet uses Golden Blend, and one-sixth of those who use it, have used it for the past five years. Ask some of your friends about Golden Blend. Before I began advertising I was sure that I had a coffee that would stand back of every statement I made in my announcements. I was sure that the quality of this coffee would not vary, so that you would have good coffee all the time, and I was sure that it was a blend that suited nine-tenths of all the people. Possibly you are one that it will not suit; but,—if you will try a pound of Golden Blend upon my recommendation and if it fails to suit your taste, I will blend specially for you in half pound lots and make you a present of the coffee until I have suited your taste.

We give especial care to our repair department—remount diamonds and other precious stones with skillful exactness. All our repair work is at lowest possible cost, consistent with excellent workmanship.

Thieves and Humor.

The reason why cockneys are such smart thieves is that they have a keen sense of humor. The street arab picks your pocket while he grins at you. It is only stupid thieves who are serious. Poor Oliver Twist's seriousness was the cause of his arrest. The humor of the Artful Dodger and Charley Bates saved them.—Strand Magazine.

Paste This In Your Hat

If your teeth need much attention, you can save $5.00 to $10.00 on the job by having me do your work. I know what I'm talking about. My regular fees are much below those dictated in the agreement. Signed and adhered to by so many of the local dentists.

And my work I am not ashamed to have compared with any you may have in your mouth for which you probably have paid twice my fee.

I put out good work, as is evidenced by my seeing teeth nearly every day which are now in the best of repair, which I fixed up five to eight years ago.

Try me for your next dentistry.

POLICE NABBED PRECIOUS PAIR

WHO CONFESS TO ROBBERY AT POTTERVILLE, MICH.

AWOKE IN ST. PAUL DEPOT

At 3 A. M. today to find that Third Party Had Made Off with Part of Ill-gotten Plunder.

John Jones and Lester Cook, two youths who give their ages as 18 and 19 years, respectively, complained bitterly to the ticket agent when they awoke from a nap in the St. Paul passenger station about three o'clock this morning and found that a companion whom they had picked up at Harvard had disappeared with a rifle belonging to them and all their pocket-money excepting 38 pennies. The ticket agent promptly reported the matter to police headquarters and Officer John Brown sent Patrolmen William Mason and Sam Brown to the scene.

Victims Placed Under Arrest
The first thing the officers did, after inspecting the suspicious-looking complainants and hearing their story, was to escort the pair to the police station and place them in auto-custody. After that, they searched for the Harvard man, but he was nowhere to be found.

Armed for War and Peace
When the two unsuspecting youths were searched, the pockets in their coats and rolled overalls yielded: 2 revolvers, 200 cartridges, 8 jack-knives, a deck of cards, several pairs of new socks and gloves, 2 pocketbooks, numerous cigars and plugs of chewing tobacco, and the 38 cents. The character of these possessions at once tended to confirm the suspicion which the patrolmen had entertained from the outset, namely, that it was simply a case of "no honor among thieves."

Made Admissions of Theft
Chief Appleby put the precious pair through the "sweat-box" this morning and after much questioning they not only admitted that they had served terms in a Michigan reform school, but also confessed that the miscellaneous merchandise and firearms found on their persons had been stolen from a store owned by a man named Seefeld in the little town of Potterville, which is located in Eaton county about 13 miles from Lansing, Michigan.

A Bicycle Raid
Jones and Cook aver that they procured bicycles in the country and after riding into the village late at night, broke into and ransacked the store. They rode away with what booty they could carry and after selling the wheels in the first town they came to, boarded a passenger train for Chicago. They lost their train for Chicago, and in a moment of despair they decided to make a charge of courage. They were captured before Judge Lange, in municipal court this morning and have been committed to the county jail for ten days.

Chief Receives Reply
In answer to his message Chief of Police Appleby this afternoon received the following telegram:
Charlotte, Mich., Oct. 8, Geo. M. Appleby, Janesville, Wis.
Hold mail. Will start officers at 3:20 this p. m. Arrive at midnight.

$2000 IMPROVEMENTS FOR C. F. BROCKHAUS.

Mr. Brockhaus has just about completed a very marked improvement in his dry cleaning establishment. An annex building has been erected of concrete, three new dry cleaning machines of modern type have been installed and all tanks and vessels for the storing and distilling of benzine have been put under ground.

Mr. Brockhaus recently attended the Dry Cleaners' convention and brought home ideas for improving his plant. At the convention there were five chemists from all parts of the globe each delivering an extended lecture, and the ideas of 125 dry cleaners were exchanged and discussed.

Mr. Brockhaus has brought home these ideas and is giving the public the benefit of them with his $2,000 improvements.

Clothes are cleaned thoroughly without being put in water, without being rubbed and without the use of injurious chemicals. This process will not in any way damage the most delicate fabric or coloring and clothes are made to look as good as new.

A new department has been added in the annex for cleaning rugs by which all large spots will be removed. After the rugs are cleaned they are sized so that they will lay flat to the floor.

The lace curtains are all cleaned by hand. After they are cleaned they are placed upon a large steam cylinder and spread to proper size. No pins are used and the edges are brought to their original shape.

one leg, which at the time was not considered at all serious, and probably would not have been had he remained quiet, but in his anxiety to

MRS. BETSY FREEMAN
KNIT HER STOCKINGS

Mrs. M. J. Inman Knew the Famous Pennsylvania Woman When She Was a Little Girl.

Mrs. M. J. Inman, who lives on Oak land avenue remembers Mrs. Betsy Freeman the famous Redbank Pennsylvania woman, who has lived under every president very well and as a little girl at her old home in Mithun-burg, Pennsylvania used to carry the yarn for the family knitting to Mrs.
Freeman who was then an old woman.

Mrs. Inman was much interested in the dispatch in last evening's Gazette which told of Mrs. Freeman quietly celebrating her one hundred and fifteenth birthday and said this morning of the wonderful old lady who is probably the oldest in the United States.

"I knew Mrs. Freeman when I was a little girl. She was an old woman then and I used to take the yarn to her that she knit into her stockings. Mrs.
Freeman was never well off and did the knitting for the whole village of Mithun-burg. She was an old lady then but a wonderful knitter and many is the time I have gone to her house with yarn or for the stockings she made for my mother and our family.

"Seven years ago when I was cast
I saw Mrs. Freeman and while she was over a hundred she was able to walk a half mile and seemed cheery and happy."

Mrs. Freeman was born in Madison Township, Pennsylvania in 1793 and has always made her home in Pennsylvania. She has lived during the terms of every president of the United States but does not apparently show her great age.

WHERE SHE MADE THE MISTAKE.

Mrs. Jack Frost's Experience as a Chicken Raiser.

"Yes, farming is all very easy," the farmer said. "Any city person could make a success of it at the first go-off."

He sneered at his three girl boarders from Chicago in order to show that he had spoken in bitter irony.

"Mrs. Jack Frost," he resumed,
"took the farm next to mine one year.
Being from the city, she thought she would show us country people a thing or two about real farming. She began on a chicken yard."

"It was a fine yard. Pretty soon a hundred eggs hatched out. There was half hens and half roosters. Mrs.
Jack Frost, before sailing for Europe, separated the two sexes, and, killing all the roosters, she sent them to her friends. A fine lot of spring brilers they made—they were no bigger than squabs."

"But when Mrs. Jack Frost got back from Europe, a strange sight her chicken yard presented. It was nothing but young roosters—young roosters crowing, young roosters swaggering about, while here, with flying feathers and squawks and blood, a terrible fight went on, and there, disregarded by all, lay the corpses of brave birds slain in single combat.
At sunrise you could hear the crowing of those roosters all over the county."

"Poor Mrs. Jack Frost understood the theory of chicken raising all right;
only, in separating the young birds,
she mistook the males for the females and vice versa."

Proved His Case.
Mr. Pinchpenny stepped aboard the car downtown and paid his fare, but the conductor, who was very busy, forgot that he had received the nickel, and in a little while again held out his hand for the fare.

"I paid you a mile back," protested
Mr. Pinchpenny.

"I think not," rejoined the conductor.

"I say I did."

Mr. Pinchpenny hesitated a moment, and then said with the air of an injured citizen:

"Don't you remember a man that got on about five minutes ago and held on to his nickel as if he hated to give it up, and you almost had to pry it out of his hand?"

"Yes."

"Well, that was me," said Mr. Pinch-penny.

"All right," said the conductor with a grin, as he passed on.

The Younger Set

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS.
Author of "The Fighting Chance," Etc.

Copyright, 1907, by Robert W. Chambers

Interwoven with this fine, gripping story of a splendid girl and a real man—one of the most charming love stories of recent years—are the author's views of some of the problems of Society. Divorce, gambling, marital unhappiness, are here treated as they enter into the lives of men and women possessed of wealth and social position. If the writer seems harsh in his characterization of the older members of the "smart set," he is tender and hopeful in his views of the incoming generation. In the "younger set," according to him, lies certain hope of regeneration of the wealthy and fashionable world. As he sees those who will sit on the thrones of power, their hands are clean, their hearts are pure, their ideas and aspirations are worthy. When they shall take their mature places in Society's ranks, it will acquire a new tone and a better and worthier view of life and its problems and responsibilities than now prevail.

conducted himself. Then that fellow Rutheven turned up—and Selwyn is above that sort of suspicion. Besides, his scouts took the field within a week.

He dropped a heavy, highly colored hat on his desk with a bang.

"After that hike Selwyn came back to find that Alice had called with Jack Rutheven. And what did he do—take legal measures to free himself, as you or I or anybody with an ounce of sense in 'em would have done? No, he didn't. That infernal Selwyn conscience began to get busy, making him believe that if a woman kicks over the traces it must be because of some occult shortcoming on his part. In some way or other that man persuaded himself of his responsibility for her misbehavior. He knew what it meant if he didn't ask the law to aid him to get rid of her. He knew perfectly well that his silence meant acknowledgment of culpability, that he couldn't remain in the service under such suspicion.

"And now, Gerald," continued Austin, striking his broad palm with expanded forefinger and leaning heavily forward, "I'll tell you what sort of a man Philip Selwyn is. He permitted Alice to sue him for absolute divorce, and to give her every chance to marry Rutheven, he refused to defend the suit. That sort of chivalry is very picturesque, no doubt, but it cost him his career—set him adrift at thirty-five, a man branded as having been divorced from his wife for cause, with no profession left him, no business, not much money—a man in the prime of life and hope and ambition, clean in thought and deed, an upright, just, generous, sensitive man, whose whole career has been blighted because he was too merciful, too generous to throw the blame where it belonged. And it belongs on the shoulders of that Mrs. Jack Rutheven—Alice Rutheven—whose name you may see in the columns of any paper that trickles to the sort of society she figures in. I want you to understand that Selwyn is every inch a man, and when you have the honor to meet him keep that fact in the back of your head.

"The moment that the door opened he was aware of a distant and curious uproar—faraway echoes of cheering and the faint barking of dogs. These seemed to cease as the man in waiting admitted him, but before he could make an inquiry or produce a card bedlam itself apparently broke loose somewhere in the immediate upper landing—noise in its crudest elemental definition—through which the mortified man at the door strove to make himself heard: "Beg pardon, sir; it's the children broke loose and runnin' wild-like!"

"The what?"

"Only the children, sir; fox huntin' the cat, sir."

"His voice was lost in the yelling dissonance descending crescendo from floor to floor. Then an avalanche of children and dogs poured down the hall stairs in pursuit of a rumpled and bored cat, tumbling with yelps and cheers and thuds among the thick rugs on the floor.

Here the cat turned and soundly cuffed a pale fat beagle puppy, who shrieked and fled, burrowing for safety into the yelling heap of children and dogs on the floor. Above this heap legs, arms and the tails of dogs waved wildly for a moment, then a small boy, blond hair in disorder,

"What has happened," he said, "is this. Captain Selwyn is back in town—sent up his card to me, but they told him I was attending a directors' meeting. When the meeting was over I found his card and a message scribbled, saying he'd recently landed and was going uptown to call on Nina. She'll keep him there, of course, until I get home, so I shall see him this evening. Now, before you meet him I want you to plainly understand the truth about this unfortunate affair, and that's why I telephoned your glint-eyed friend Neergard just now to let you come around here for half an hour.

"In the first place, Captain Selwyn is my brother-in-law—which wouldn't make an atom of difference to me in my judgment of what has happened if he had been at fault. But the facts of the case are these. He held up an impressive forefinger and held it flat across the large, ruddy palm of the other hand. "First of all, he married a cat! Cat, cat. Is that clear, Gerald?"

"Yes, sir."

"Good! What sort of a dance you led him out there in Manila I've heard. Never mind that now. What I want to know is how he behaved—with what quiet dignity, steady impudence and sweet temper under constant provocation and mortification he of your head among the few brains with which Providence has equipped you."

"Thanks," said Gerald, coloring up. He cast his cigarette into the empty fireplace, slid off the edge of the table and picked up his hat. Austin eyed him without particular approval.

"You buy too many clothes," he observed. "That's a new suit, isn't it?"

"Certainly," said Gerald. "I needed it."

"Oh, if you can afford it, all right! How's the nubile Mr. Neergard?"

"Neergard is flourishing. We put through that loose valley deal. I tell you what, Austin, I wish you could see your way clear to finance one or two—"

Austin's frown cut him short.

"Oh, all right! You know your own business, of course," said the boy, a little resentfully. "Only as I have, Harmon & Co. have thought it worth while."

"I don't care what Pano-Harmon think," growled Austin, touching a button over his desk. His stenographer entered. He nodded a curt dismissal to Gerald, adding as the boy reached the door:

"Your sister expects you to be on hand tonight, and so do we."

Gerald halted.

"I'd clean forgotten," he began. "I made another—rather important engagement."

But Austin was not listening—in fact, he had already begun to dictate to his stenographer, and Gerald stood a moment, hesitating, then turned on his heel and went away down the resounding marble corridor.

"They never let me alone," he muttered. "They're always at me—following me up as though I were a school-boy. Austin's the worst—never satisfied. What do I care for all these functions—sitting around with the younger set and keeping the cradle of conversation rocking? I won't go to that infernal baby show!"

He entered the elevator and shot down to the great rotunda, still searing over his grievance, for he had made arrangements to join a card party at Julius Neergard's rooms that night, and he had no intention of foregoing that pleasure just because his sister's first growing-up party was fixed for the same date.

Meanwhile Captain Selwyn was sauntering along Fifth avenue under the leafless trees, scanning the houses of the rich and great across the way, and these new houses of the rich and great stared back at him out of a thousand enameled and polished and expressionless as the monoliths of the night.

And, strolling at leisure in the pleasant winter weather, he came presently to a street stretching eastward in all the cold impressiveness of very new limestone and plate glass.

Could this be the street where his sister now lived?

As usual when perplexed, he slowly raised his hand to his mustache, and his pleasant gray eyes, still slightly bloodshot from the glare of the tropics, narrowed as he inspected this unfamiliar house.

"This house was a big, elaborate limestone affair, evidently new. Winter sunshine sparkled on these huge enameled, on glass marbles and the burnished bronze foliations of grille and door. He mounted the doorstep, rang and leisurely examined four stiff-box trees flanking the ornate portal, mangled vegetation compared to what he had been accustomed to for so many years.

Nobody came. Once or twice he fancied he heard sounds proceeding from inside the house. He rang again and fumbled for his cardcase. Somebody was coming.

The moment that the door opened he was aware of a distant and curious uproar—faraway echoes of cheering and the faint barking of dogs. These seemed to cease as the man in waiting admitted him, but before he could make an inquiry or produce a card bedlam itself apparently broke loose somewhere in the immediate upper landing—noise in its crudest elemental definition—through which the mortified man at the door strove to make himself heard: "Beg pardon, sir; it's the children broke loose and runnin' wild-like!"

"The what?"

She'll keep him there, of course, until I get home, so I shall see him this evening. Now, before you meet him I want you to plainly understand the truth about this unfortunate affair, and that's why I telephoned your glint-eyed friend Neergard just now to let you come around here for half an hour.

"In the first place, Captain Selwyn is my brother-in-law—which wouldn't make an atom of difference to me in my judgment of what has happened if he had been at fault. But the facts of the case are these. He held up an impressive forefinger and held it flat across the large, ruddy palm of the other hand. "First of all, he married a cat! Cat, cat. Is that clear, Gerald?"

"Yes, sir."

thousand enameled and polished and expressionless as the monoliths of the night.

And, strolling at leisure in the pleasant winter weather, he came presently to a street stretching eastward in all the cold impressiveness of very new limestone and plate glass.

Could this be the street where his sister now lived?

As usual when perplexed, he slowly raised his hand to his mustache, and his pleasant gray eyes, still slightly bloodshot from the glare of the tropics, narrowed as he inspected this unfamiliar house.

"This house was a big, elaborate limestone affair, evidently new. Winter sunshine sparkled on these huge enameled, on glass marbles and the burnished bronze foliations of grille and door. He mounted the doorstep, rang and leisurely examined four stiff-box trees flanking the ornate portal, mangled vegetation compared to what he had been accustomed to for so many years.

Nobody came. Once or twice he fancied he heard sounds proceeding from inside the house. He rang again and fumbled for his cardcase. Somebody was coming.

The moment that the door opened he was aware of a distant and curious uproar—faraway echoes of cheering and the faint barking of dogs. These seemed to cease as the man in waiting admitted him, but before he could make an inquiry or produce a card bedlam itself apparently broke loose somewhere in the immediate upper landing—noise in its crudest elemental definition—through which the mortified man at the door strove to make himself heard: "Beg pardon, sir; it's the children broke loose and runnin' wild-like!"

"The what?"

"Only the children, sir; fox huntin' the cat, sir."

"His voice was lost in the yelling dissonance descending crescendo from floor to floor. Then an avalanche of children and dogs poured down the hall stairs in pursuit of a rumpled and bored cat, tumbling with yelps and cheers and thuds among the thick rugs on the floor.

Here the cat turned and soundly cuffed a pale fat beagle puppy, who shrieked and fled, burrowing for safety into the yelling heap of children and dogs on the floor. Above this heap legs, arms and the tails of dogs waved wildly for a moment, then a small boy, blond hair in disorder,

"What has happened," he said, "is this. Captain Selwyn is back in town—sent up his card to me, but they told him I was attending a directors' meeting. When the meeting was over I found his card and a message scribbled, saying he'd recently landed and was going uptown to call on Nina. She'll keep him there, of course, until I get home, so I shall see him this evening. "Thanks," said Gerald, coloring up. He cast his cigarette into the empty fireplace, slid off the edge of the table and picked up his hat. Austin eyed him without particular approval.

"You buy too many clothes," he observed. "That's a new suit, isn't it?"

"Certainly," said Gerald. "I needed it."

"Oh, if you can afford it, all right! How's the nubile Mr. Neergard?"

"Neergard is flourishing. We put through that loose valley deal. I tell you what, Austin, I wish you could see your way clear to finance one or two—"

Austin's frown cut him short.

"Oh, all right! You know your own business, of course," said the boy, a little resentfully. "Only as I have, Harmon & Co. have thought it worth while."

"I don't care what Pano-Harmon think," growled Austin, touching a button over his desk. His stenographer entered. He nodded a curt dismissal to Gerald, adding as the boy reached the door:

"Your sister expects you to be on hand tonight, and so do we."

Gerald halted.

"I'd clean forgotten," he began. "I made another—rather important engagement."

But Austin was not listening—in fact, he had already begun to dictate to his stenographer, and Gerald stood a moment, hesitating, then turned on his heel and went away down the resounding marble corridor.

"They never let me alone," he muttered. "They're always at me—following me up as though I were a school-boy. Austin's the worst—never satisfied. What do I care for all these functions—sitting around with the younger set and keeping the cradle of conversation rocking? I won't go to that infernal baby show!"

He entered the elevator and shot down to the great rotunda, still searing over his grievance, for he had made arrangements to join a card party at Julius Neergard's rooms that night, and he had no intention of foregoing that pleasure just because his sister's first growing-up party was fixed for the same date.

Meanwhile Captain Selwyn was sauntering along Fifth avenue under the leafless trees, scanning the houses of the rich and great across the way, and these new houses of the rich and great stared back at him out of a

PEABODY FUND SURPRISE

FINAL DISTRIBUTION WILL NOT BE MADE YET.

Normal College at Nashville Must Wait Until Tennessee Appropriates Sum Stipulated.

New York, Oct. 8.—Surprise was occasioned Wednesday when the trustees of the Peabody Education fund met in this city and decided not to make a final distribution of the fund of $2,500,000 left by George Peabody of Massachusetts in 1867 for educating the children of the southern states.

In establishing the fund the donor provided that the income of the $2,500,000 was to be used each year for educational purposes and that at the end of 30 years the trustees could distribute the money among such educational institutions as they should select. At a previous meeting of the trustees, among whom is President Roosevelt, it was practically decided to make the distribution.

In 1875 the trustees, believing that the southern states were providing proper common school education for the children of that section, established the Peabody Normal college for teachers in Nashville, Tenn. It was intended to give $1,000,000 outright to this college and to appropriate the balance of the fund among such other educational institutions as the trustees should name.

The reason given Wednesday for not making the distribution was that the Peabody Normal college for teachers has not complied with conditions stipulated by the trustees when the college was founded. The agreement was that, to entitle the college to $1,000,000 when the distribution was made, appropriations aggregating $750,000 must first be made for the benefit of the college by the city of Nashville, Davidson county and the state of Tennessee.

Joseph H. Choate and Richard Olney of the board of trustees were appointed a committee to investigate whether this condition has been lived up to and their report showed that the city of Nashville and Davidson county have made appropriations amounting to $300,000, but that the state has yet made no appropriation. The committee was given to understand, however, that the legislature of the state, which will meet next January, will probably make the appropriation. Therefore the trustees decided not to distribute the fund until some time after next January.

How Girls Are Judged.

Some men can take in all a girl wears; the average man sees if she be the kind he likes—or the other kind.

If he cannot go into details, he can, however, see whether.

Her shoes are run down at the heels or any of the buttons are gone.

Her gloves have holes in the tips and would be better for soap suds or gasolene.

She looks "hand-boxy" or as if she had never heard of pressing.

She is spotty or slouchy or neat and trim.

Men may be impressionists as to colors and materials; they are others when it comes to noticing little things that bespeak slovenliness.

Do not forget, girls, that it is by such little things that you are judged, rather than by what you pay for your clothes or how well you carry them.—Exchange.

Love Must Be Reciprocal.

If love is to be genuinely, permanently satisfying, it necessarily must be reciprocal. To hark back to first principles, love, as created, merely is one man feels for one particular woman, one woman for one man, and for him only, so long as they both shall live, which needs make the two content, nay, joyful, to forsake all others and cleave each to each.

BIG ELEVATOR EXPLODES

THIRTEEN KILLED IN DISASTER AT RICHFORD, VT.

Structure Destroyed by Flames in Which a Number of Workmen and a Woman Perish.

Richford, Vt., Oct. 8.—With a concussion which shook the entire village, a large grain elevator, having a capacity of 500,000 bushels, exploded late Wednesday causing the death of 12 men and a woman.

The explosion blew off the entire roof of the building, scattering timbers in all directions, and almost instantly flames burst out all over the structure. Twenty-one men were employed in the building, of whom 11 are missing and undoubtedly perished. All lived in Richford.

Mrs. John Jefferey, who was walking with a companion along the Canadian Pacific railroad track close to the elevator, was burned to death, and an unknown woman, who was with her was burned so seriously that her life is despaired of.

The elevator was owned jointly by the Canadian Pacific and Boston & Maine railroads and was occupied by the Quaker Oats Company of Chicago. The amount of grain it contained was very large. The flames, which are supposed to have been started by spontaneous combustion in the dry dust of the grain, spread so quickly that the limited fire apparatus of the village was of
